Dealer builds "Baddest Rhino ever!"

Yamaha's Rhino is the most capable off-road vehicle ever made, but the service techs at Waynesburg Yamaha have turned the stock Rhino into what the dealer calls, "the baddest Rhino ever!"

Starting with a basic Rhino 700, the Waynesburg crew first adds a Rancho long travel suspension system that makes the Rhino wider, stronger and more capable than ever. The Rancho Rhino suspension system features billet 6061 aluminum upper control four-inch A-arms, HSLA steel lower control arms, exclusive self-lubricating control arm bushings, and high-strength tie rod ends and inner tie rod. This all widens the Rhino's stance by a full eight inches for much greater stability on steep grades. Suspension is handled by heavy-duty long-travel remote-reservoir shock absorbers that are four times stronger than stock.

Further enhancing the Rancho Rhino is a Rancho roll cage extension that stiffens the structure of the Rhino frame and mounts a very handy (and very cool) spare tire carrier. Then comes the big Rancho front bumper with a giant aluminum protective plate to shelter the engine and front end from whatever may come. Finally, a 14-inch big wheel kit gives the Rhino the clearance and the tires to crawl through the sickest sections imaginable.

But the best thing about Waynesburg Yamaha's Rancho Rhino is its value. Add up all the extras and the price exceeds $20,000. But Waynesburg Yamaha is offering the Rancho Rhino for only $15,999. You'll own the baddest Rhino on the rocks without pulling a single wrench to get it. Hurry – you won't be the only one in line.

Scarce Rhinos abundant at Waynesburg Yamaha

As most off-roaders know, the enormous popularity of Yamaha's Rhino side-by-side has led to a nationwide shortage of the beasts. Yamaha decided not to build a 2010 model Rhino in favor of an August-release 2011 model, making unsold 2009 and 2008 models the only Rhinos to be had.

But thanks to the foresight of Brian Vasko, Waynesburg Yamaha is one of the few dealers in the entire nation with a good inventory of new Rhinos

"We scoured the entire country for new Rhinos and hired trucks to go out and bring them back," says Vasko. "Now we've got every Rhino 700 model in stock – maybe the only dealer in the country that does."

Rhino models available include the Ducks Unlimited edition with RealTree camo, the Sport edition with adjustable shocks, and the Special Edition with aluminum wheels and special graphics. At the time of this writing Waynesburg Yamaha had 35 new Rhinos in stock.

"We've gone out of our way to bring our customers the Rhinos they've been asking for," Vasko says.
